Dear Kris,

Leading Xero's company-wide API Program across dozens of engineering teams has sharpened everything this role asks for: program governance at scale, EGM-level stakeholder visibility, and the discipline to keep complex, cross-functional delivery predictable and on track. I am applying for the Principal Project Manager (AO8) position with Queensland Government because it is the kind of high-profile, multi-stakeholder program environment where that experience translates directly.

At Xero, I own end-to-end programme governance across dozens of engineering teams, reporting milestones, risks, and trade-offs to EGM-level leadership. At Suncorp, I led a compliance-critical platform migration across all brands – coordinating four engineering teams including offshore contractors, introducing the governance frameworks that gave leadership reliable visibility, and keeping the programme on track. That combination – large-scale ICT delivery and regulated-enterprise rigour – is what I would bring to Queensland Government.

I do not have direct Queensland Government experience, and I want to name that plainly. What I do bring is 15 years of delivery in environments that demand the same rigour – regulated financial services, large enterprise, and global technology at scale – and a consistent track record of picking up unfamiliar governance frameworks quickly and making them work in practice. Every role in my career has required adapting to a new context, and the delivery outcomes have been consistent across all of them.

I would welcome the opportunity to discuss how my background fits the programme this role supports.

Yours sincerely,

Alan Soto
